Cyclone brings better security in-house

Australian companies lose hundreds of millions of dollars through fraud, identity theft and embezzlement every year, often resulting from careless handling of sensitive and valuable documents.

The Kobra Cyclone is a heavy duty, high volume industrial shredder that the manufacturer claims is a cost-effective option for bringing security in-house for larger organisations and government departments.

The multipurpose shredder is specially designed for large quantities of paper, cardboard, CDs, DVDs, floppy disks, credit cards, and even aluminium cans and plastic bottles. The Cyclone shreds up to 500 sheets of paper at a time, regardless of the particle size, with a shredding output up to 420kg of paper per hour.

A unique feature is the five security levels that break down material into different particle sizes depending on the importance of documents.

Using the unit is easy – one employee simply presses the start button, throws the material into the large entry opening and leaves. The turbine based shredding system automatically shreds everything and turns off completely when finished, saving both energy and time. It does not require any lubrication or oiling that other machines with similar outputs often do.

When the bag is full, the Cyclone has an automatic stop function and the plastic bag can be easily removed and disposed of using the built-in trolley.
